context

Millions of Europeans are still on the side-lines both from the labour market and from social inclusion and integration. Together with social exclusion often comes urban exclusion, taking the form of marginalised, precarious neighborhoods. These neighborhoods are characterised by very deteriorated buildings, which offers a very low comfort and in some of the worst cases, unsafe or unhealthy living conditions.

needs

This strategic partnership is dedicated to social inclusion and its links with urban precarity. Thus, it addresses to three specific needs :

- 1/ To structure and legitimate the participative methodologies
- 2/ To gather methodological references for entities of the third sector and civic organisations,
- 3/ To reveal cross-disciplinary approaches objectives

- > To define the components of good practices of participatory processes within places of urban precariousness
- > To define participatory methodologies for social inclusion in places of urban precariousness

- > To analyse case studies where these methodologies have been applied by third sector entities
- > To define the core competences needed to implement local development
- > To promote a transdisciplinary approach of pedagogy through participation activities

- > 6 transnational meetings
- > 2 training courses
- > production of 2 intellectual outputs
- > 1 multiplier event.

output

A Handbook, expounding the results of the projects: learning-by-doing methodologies, a set of tools and cross-disciplinary approaches.

Impacts

- > The raised readiness of civil society, private, public and third sector, to commit in participatory processes within social inclusion initiatives.
- > The raised awareness and expertise in Europe regarding local development projects in urban precariousness situations.
- > The raised knowledge about social follow up, architectural, cultural actions in shantytowns.

> The raised knowledge about participation tools as a type of non formal education partners

Participatory Actions for Social Inclusion (PASI) brings together five organisations working in different and complementary ways, in order to explore how the participatory approach in places of urban precariousness can contribute to social inclusion :

Quatorze (France) and its expertise as architects and urbanist, specially regarding its experiences and resources on slum re-sorption projects,

The Emplea Foundation (Spain) and its expertise on profesional insertion,

Acina (France) and its experience on social follow-up in the context of slum re-sorption projects,

Finacoop (France) and its knowledge concerning Social and Solidarity Economy,

ZaLab (Italy) and its experience concerning participatory video laboratories.

target group

- > Non-profit organisations
- > Policy makers and decision makers
- > Inhabitants of precarious neighborhoods.
